

Contribution ID: 356

Type: Poster

Collective Neutrino Oscillations

99% of the energy emitted by core collapse supernovae is in the form of neutrinos. Highly non-linear effects, due to neutrino self-interactions, that are present only in the dense environments such as a supernova core offers a unique opportunity to study neutrino properties. We demonstrate a new technique for calculating probability of collective neutrino oscillations.

Primary author: Dr SHALGAR, Shashank (University of New Mexico)

Co-author: Prof. DUAN, Huaiyu (University of New Mexico)

Presenter: Dr SHALGAR, Shashank (University of New Mexico)

Track Classification: Supernova Neutrinos